

I Am in a Hurry

I have more days behind me than I do in front of me so I am in a hurry.

I can't afford to be cynical, satisfied or slow.

I don't want to do anything halfway for You.

I don't want to be pulled away by self interest, pride, or opposition.

I don't have the time to live on the treadmills of accomplishment and notoriety while the world around me starves from lack of grace, drifting away from the mystery of the Divine.

Commandeer my life for Your glory.

Open my hands, sharpen my focus and steady my aim.

Make short work of the claptrap meanderings of my own voice. I am weary of it.

I say, "Away with the litter of self-serving endeavors that I valued and held close to my heart."

I am not satisfied with teaspoon-sized, halfhearted, unbroken, lifeless worship.

I will not sing anything that I am not willing to live.

I refuse to accept meaningless prayers for temporal things in my conversations with You.

I refuse to look at others and judge what they are doing or how I am doing.

I refuse to hold back anything from You no matter what the cost is.

There's no way to do anything but love with even the slightest and most fleeting glimpse of the cross.

So, I want to run as fast as I can, pray with the constancy of angels and love everyone I encounter, even if it means pain.

And I will make the most of this day in all of its paradoxical, mysterious glory.

There's just not enough time to do anything else.
